

Dear Commissioners,

These are my concerns:

Media corporations, such as Clear Channel, who have such power and money as to purchase and own billboard space in major cities who censor the messages (anti-war or other) that may appear on the billboards. This is a denial of free speech whicy the FCC should protect.

Low power FM stations should exist in urban areas where their alternative and diverse views may be heard. The technological knowledge exists to prevent unwanted channel interference or crosstalk. The FCC should protect and defend alternative and diverse expressions of speech.

Broadband over Power Lines (BPL) if approved, would deny FCC licensed amateur operators significant parts of the HF specturm. Amateur radio operators are a small, but crucial source of technical knowledge and public emergency service that enhances our culture. The FCC should nurture and encourage this small population rather than passively stand by and witness its demise.

Sincerely,

John F. Kohler
